Commander
Navy Recruiting Command
Occupational Safety and Health Policy

1 February 2010

1. As Commander of Navy Recruiting Command, it is my policy that all personnel take a proactive role in ensuring we create and maintain a safe and healthy environment on or off duty. Accidental mishaps remain the number one killer of U.S. Navy personnel today. In order to maintain mission readiness, we must embrace safe practices and foster behavioral risk management as part of our culture. The Secretary of Defense has emphasized the importance of safety and health and has challenged the U.S. Navy and other services to reduce mishaps by 50 percent. Tragically, we continue lose shipmates to accidents ranging from private motor vehicle accidents to off-duty mishaps. These incidents hamper operational readiness which results in pain and personal hardships for everyone.

2. As a team we must be proactive and comply with all safety rules, attend safety training, and create a high-level of hazard awareness. We must make this a priority in everything we do and develop a culture of safety awareness throughout the chain of command and at home with our family and friends. Safety must not be looked upon as an added duty but as an integral part of our daily lives.

3. The future success of Navy Recruiting Command and our families are dependent on how we embrace our challenges, evaluate our efforts, and collectively pursue our goals. It is of vital importance that we inculcate a culture of mission readiness that emphasizes risk management and sound judgment.
